NOTE FROM THE PASTOR:

Dear Parishioners,

Each year on this day the universal Church celebrates the memorial of St. John Bosco, the founder of the Salesian order, who died in 1888. Bosco dedicated his life to the youth of his day. The saint was known for his visions and dreams. One of his most famous visions was that of Hell, the existence of which many doubt today. On one occasion his guardian angel woke him up and told him to follow along. He said, "We took the road. The road kept sloping downward. And then, at the bottom of this precipice, at the entrance of a dark valley, an enormous building loomed into sight, its towering portal, tightly locked, facing our road. When I finally got to the bottom, I became smothered by a suffocating heat, while a greasy, green-tinted smoke lit by flashes of scarlet flames rose from behind those enormous walls which loomed higher than mountains. I looked up and read these words: "The place of no relief." I realized that we were at the gates of Hell.

"From here on," he said, "no one may have a helpful companion, a comforting friend, a loving heart, a compassionate glance, or a benevolent word. All of that is gone forever." I was staring in bewilderment around me when a lad dashed out of a gate. Seemingly unaware of anything else, he emitted a most shrilling scream, like one who is about to fall into a cauldron of liquid bronze, and plummeted into the center of the cave; instantly, he became incandescent and perfectly motionless, while the echo of his dying wail lingered for an instant more. Other boys kept hurtling in the same way in increasing numbers, all screaming the same way and then all becoming equally motionless and incandescent. I noticed that the first seemed frozen to the spot, one hand and one foot raised into the air; the second boy seemed bent almost double to the floor. Others stood or hung in various other positions, balancing themselves on one foot or hand, sitting or lying on their backs or on their sides, standing or kneeling, hands clutching their hair. Briefly, the scene resembled a large statuary group of youngsters cast into ever more painful postures. I then recalled what is written in the Bible to the effect that as one falls into Hell, so he shall forever remain. Where the tree falls, there it shall lie. (Ecclesiastes 11:3).

More frightened than ever, I asked my guide: "When these boys come dashing into the cave, don't they know where they are going?" "They surely do," he answered. "They have been warned a thousand times, but they still choose to rush into the fire, because they do not detest sin and are loath to forsake it. Furthermore, they despise and reject God's constant, merciful invitations to do penance." "What advice shall I give my boys to safeguard them from such a tragedy?" I asked. He responded, "Keep telling them that by obeying God, the Church, their parents and their superiors, even in little things, they will be saved." "Anything else?" He asked. The angel answered, "Warn them against idleness. Because of idleness David fell into sin. Tell them to keep busy at all times, because the Devil will not then have a chance to tempt them. "I bowed my head and promised. Faint with dismay, I could only mutter: "Thanks for having been so good to me. Now, please lead me out of here." Leaving that hall, in no time at all we retraced our steps through that horrible courtyard and the long corridor. But as soon as we stepped across the last bronze portal, he turned to me and said: "Now that you have seen what others suffer, you too must experience a touch of Hell."

"No, No!" I cried in terror. "Do not be afraid," he told me; "Just try it. Touch this wall." I could not muster enough courage and tried to get away, but he held me back. "Try it," he insisted. "Look at this wall!" I did. It seemed incredibly thick. "There are a thousand walls between this and the real fire of Hell," my guide continued. "A thousand walls encompass it, each a thousand measures thick and equally distant from the next one. Each measure is a thousand miles. This wall therefore is millions and millions of miles from Hell's real fire. It is just a remote rim of Hell itself." When he said this, I instinctively pulled back, but he seized my hand, forced it open, and pressed it against the first of the thousand walls. The sensation was so utterly excruciating that I leaped back with a scream and found myself sitting up in bed. My hand was stinging and I kept rubbing it to ease the pain. When I got up this morning I noticed that it was swollen. Having my hand pressed against the wall, though only in a dream, felt so real that, later, the skin of my palm peeled off."
