NOTE FROM THE PASTOR:

Dear Parishioners:

New York City Police Officer Steven McDonald died January 10, 2017. After a gunshot wound sustained on duty left him paralyzed below the neck he became famous for his peace-making endeavors throughout the world. Here is an interview this saintly man gave in a documentary entitled, "The Face of Mercy."

"Before I hit the streets as a new police officer, the first thing I did was to go to my local rectory and ask the priest to bless my badge. I think that put me in a good place for future events. One summer day in the early 1980s, I was on patrol with my supervisor. We saw three kids who fit the description of those who were doing crimes in the Central Park area. As I was saying, 'I'm a police officer, I'd like to talk with you,' I thought I saw a weapon in the sock of one of the boys. When I made the tactical error of taking my eyes off the boys, one of them moved towards me with a small handgun. Before I could say, 'don't shoot,' the boy pulled the trigger. It was very loud, scary loud. The first bullet entered my head. As I fell backwards, the boy stepped closer and shot me in the throat, and then as I lay on the ground he shot me a third time.

As they brought me into the ER, I'm told, the surgeon said, 'This kid's not going to live; you better bring his family here to say goodbye.' There was a young police officer standing nearby, no rank, no high station, but when he heard that, he stepped forward into the crowd and said, 'We need to give him a second chance.' I believe that was the Holy Spirit speaking through Brian, who is my friend today. Just like that, they loaded me up on a special ambulance and flew me down to Bellevue. It was there they truly saved my life.

With Cardinal John O'Connor's support, we had Mass at my bedside every day from July until the following April. It was a game changer. With each passing day, the hospital room became more like a chapel. The darkness was lifted and light filled the room, and that's the way my life has been ever since. My wife Patti Ann was pregnant with our first child when I was shot. After one particularly negative meeting with the doctor, we didn't have much hope. When he left, Patti Ann collapsed on the floor and I had no way of calling for help. It was one of those dark, dark days when I didn't think I wanted to live much longer.

One day, I was looking out a dirty window, caught up in my thoughts. All of a sudden I felt this soft little face touching my skin. My wife was able to sneak up behind me with our new baby. It was like being touched by the finger of God. The message I received was, 'Here's this new life; you have to live for him.' During a press conference after the shooting, Patti Ann told everyone that I wanted to forgive the boy who shot me. The media were taken aback; they weren't expecting it. But if I chose not to forgive Shavod Jones, I don't think I would be alive. All the negative emotions would have overtaken me. Once I said yes to the idea of forgiveness, it freed me and I was able to move forward with my purpose in God's plan. Shavod died in a motorcycle accident three days after his release from prison. I never had the chance to help him, but my wife encouraged me to reach out to kids like him so they might know life without the violence on the streets. I understand much better now that our world needs prayer, and that God always answers our prayers, even though the answers come in His time. God Bless You!

Fr. Eric
