NOTE FROM THE PASTOR:

Dear Parishioners:

As you know, parents face challenges raising children in the Catholic Faith. David Mills mentions a major concern, namely, how to help children understand the ultimate meaning of our religion. This plays out especially in the occasional tug-of-war to get them to come to Mass. [“A Lesson for Parents: Don’t Drag Your Children to Mass for the Wrong Reasons.” Aleiteia.org. October 11, 2017.]. Mills makes two fine points.

First, our approach should be Christ-centered. “There’s a difference,” he says, “between wanting to be a Catholic and loving Christ and His Church. You ought to want to be a Catholic, but only because in the Church you find Jesus.” When I was a child whenever a particular older relative of mine came to church with us she would often ask us children after Mass, “Don’t you feel better now after going to church?” Reflecting upon her approach as a grown man I think that she had very good intentions. She wanted to motivate us children to keep coming to Mass. However, she was appealing to our subjective inner feelings, which, as you know, can vary with the weather. That we go to Mass for Jesus, which is what Mills emphasizes, is a better approach.

Jesus [in tandem with the Father and the Holy Spirit] has created us. He has suffered and died for us as our Redeemer. He is the author of all that is good in our lives. Therefore, we do well to remind our children that we go to church for Jesus: to worship Him, to thank Him and to praise Him. Thus, we go to give—to give what we owe to Jesus. However, because He is so much more generous than we are we also go to receive—to receive that which is totally good and the greatest, namely Jesus Himself: in the living Word of God proclaimed at Mass and deposited in our souls, and most especially in the Blessed Sacrament.

Mills points out that we sometimes forget the centrality of Christ in our effort to strengthen the faith lives of our children. We instrumentalize the faith, he says. We make it an instrument for getting something we want. “We fret about our children entering a seductive yet hostile world. We worry they’ll make ‘bad choices’ and screw up their lives in a way they’ll never be able to undo. So we press church on them as a way of keeping them safe. On Sunday morning, our children can hear ‘Let’s go for our weekly attitude adjustment,’ not ‘Let’s go meet Jesus.’ They can hear, ‘You ought to be like this,’ not ‘You ought to love Jesus who loves you.’ They see that for you the Church is a means to an end. They know you believe it, but they also know you’re using it. If they don’t want the same end as you, and they won’t, being kids, they may well reject the means.”

Second, our approach to the Faith should be Heaven-centered. Our religion is not ultimately aimed at this world. To make this claim is ironic, considering that the Catholic Church does so much for the world. We are the largest provider of social services in the world today. We do more to serve the sick, help the poor, and educate children than any other organization or government on the planet. Nevertheless, the point of our religion is not to build up an earthly paradise, but to prepare our souls for Heaven. St. Paul once said, “If for this life only we have hoped, we are the most pitiful people.” (1 Cor. 15:19).

In Mere Christianity C.S. Lewis explained that history shows that the Christians who did most to help this world, starting with the Apostles, were the ones most concerned with the next world. “It is since Christians have largely ceased to think of the other world that they have become so ineffective in this,” he adds. Mills reminds us that when we aim at Heaven we will get earth “thrown in”. However, if we aim only at earth we will get neither. It seems like a strange rule but something similar can be seen at work in other matters. For instance, health is a great blessing, but once we make physical health our number one concern we often become hypochondriacs. “This offers a lesson for parents. Aim at Heaven. Don’t drag your children to Mass because it’ll save them from the world or make them better or turn them into the kind of children you want. Bring them because you love Jesus in the Mass and in His Church, and make sure they know that for you Jesus is the end, not ever a means. Weirdly, you may then get the child you want.” In other words, seek first the Kingdom of God, and all these [good] things will be added unto you. (Matthew 6:33).

God Bless You!

Father Eric
