NOTE FROM THE PASTOR:

Dear Parishioners:

I read a beautiful reflection about forgiveness. It was written by Bud Welch, whose twenty-three year old daughter, Julie, was killed in the bomb blast that destroyed the Alfred P. Murrah building in Oklahoma City on April 19, 1995. Welch writes:

“In December 1998, after Tim McVeigh had been sentenced to death, I had a chance to meet Bill McVeigh [Tim’s father] at his home near Buffalo. I wanted to show him that I did not blame him for my daughter Julie’s death. His youngest daughter, Jennifer, also wanted to meet me, after Bill had showed me his garden, the three of us sat around the kitchen table. Up on the wall were family snapshots, including Tim’s graduation picture. They noticed that I kept looking up at it, so I felt compelled to say something. “God, what a good-looking kid,” I said.

Earlier, when we’d been in the garden, Bill had asked me, “Bud, are you able to cry?” I’d told him, “I don’t usually have a problem crying.” His reply was, “I can’t cry, even though I’ve got a lot to cry about.” But now, sitting at the kitchen table, looking at Tim’s photo, a big tear rolled down his face. It was the love of a father for a son.

When I got ready to leave, I shook Bill’s hand, then extended it to Jennifer, but she just grabbed me and threw her arms around me. She was the same sort of age as Julie but felt so much taller. I don’t know which one of us started to cry first. Then I held her face in my hands and said, “Look, honey, the three of us are in this for the rest of our lives. I don’t want your brother to die and I’ll do everything I can to prevent it.” As I walked away from the house, I realized that until that moment I had walked alone, but now a tremendous weight had lifted from my shoulders. I had found someone who was a bigger victim of the Oklahoma bombing than I was, because while I can speak in front of thousands of people and say wonderful things about Julie, if Bill

McVeigh meets a stranger he probably doesn’t even say he had a son.

About a year before the execution I found it in my heart to forgive Tim McVeigh. It was a release for me rather than for him.” (Cited in Marina Cantacuzino, The Forgiveness Project: Stories for a Vengeful Age, Jessica Kingsley Publishers, 2015).

Forgiveness is a central part of Christianity. Jesus taught us: Love your enemies. (Mt 5:44). He also said when we pray we should say, “Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us.” How very different is this approach compared to the jihadists and others (like McVeigh) who burn so badly with a desire to harm those whom they consider to be enemies that they go so far as to murder innocent people, including children.

I told someone recently of the importance of simply praying for those who have offended us. That is the first step in the process of forgiveness. I explained to this person that such a prayer is an expression of love. Love and forgiveness go hand in hand. The Apostle tells us: Love does not brood over injuries. (1 Cor. 13). Therefore, when we pray we love. When we love there is forgiveness. Thus, our prayer for one who has offended us is, at some level, an act of forgiveness. I received this response, “That just seems too simple. It doesn’t seem like it’s enough. I feel like I should be acknowledging what they did wrong to me in order to begin to forgive. I answered this good Catholic, “God is simpler than we are.”

God bless you!
Father Eric
