NOTE FROM THE PASTOR

Dear Parishioners,

Nancy Flanders tells the story of Kali. [“She was Raped at 13 and Told to Kill Her Son. She didn’t.” Lifesitenews.org, March 5, 2018.] At just thirteen years old, she was raped by a stranger. She was left feeling so frightened and ashamed that she could not bring herself to tell anyone what had happened. Consequently, she lost twenty pounds and grew ill. Then she discovered she was pregnant.

She told Live Action News, “I was three months pregnant so it was three months until my family knew anything had happened. My mother cried and told me everything was going to be okay. She was totally supportive. I was in the hospital vomiting when I found out and she looked at me and said, ‘You know what? It will be okay.’ ... She has always been against abortion so when I told her I wanted to keep it she cried and said she would help me in any way she could. She was my backbone through it all.”

Initially, Kali’s parents were the only ones who encouraged her to have the baby. Friends and family alike insisted that she have an abortion. When she refused, rumors and bullying began to assail her. Kali lost most of her friends. She explained, “Everyone said, ‘You’re going to ruin your life. You’re making a mistake. It would be so much easier if you got an abortion. You’re too young.’” At first, her father had real qualms about his young daughter giving birth to a child conceived in rape, but once he saw his grandson on the ultrasound he was convinced that his daughter had made the right choice.

Kali said, “I had one friend that stuck with me the whole time. The others spread rumors. They said I was sleeping with this person, and this person, and this person. That same lingo went around – It’s a rapist’s baby, I was too young. They spray painted ‘whore’ on my house. The bullying got really bad.” Even medical personnel made insensitive and rude comments concerning her baby, telling Kali, for instance, that she was going to give birth to a rapist.

Kali continued, “I said, ‘No, that’s just not even relevant to him. That has nothing to do with my son. He didn’t choose how he got here.’” Kali, who once considered herself pro-choice, heard her son’s heartbeat at twelve weeks gestation and knew that his life was a gift. Hearing that heartbeat helped her to choose life without looking back. She explained, “Now that I have been put in that situation, I am totally pro-life. Once you hear that baby’s heartbeat it is an indescribable feeling.

At 27 weeks, Kali’s water broke. She remained on bedrest in the hospital for a full week before her son, Smitlee, was born at just 28 weeks gestation. When Smitlee was born, he was breathing on his own but was in need of complete life support. He spent five weeks in the neonatal intensive care unit. He’s fine now. At the age of four he is completely healthy.

Kali is now 19 years old. She has no regrets whatsoever about choosing life. She does, however, believe laws need to change to protect sexual assault victims and the children they give birth to. Her rapist was caught, however, in order to protect her son, she had to allow her rapist to get away with a shorter sentence.

She explained, “They caught him and it wasn’t just me. Apparently, he had sexually assaulted others as well and they had been videoed. ... State laws are ridiculous. The rapist can – if you go to court and get a DNA test – he can get visitation or shared custody and if you don’t get a DNA test he gets a shorter sentence.” Kali decided not to have the DNA test to ensure that her rapist would never be near to her son. The result of her choice is that he has already been released from prison.

Kali is now living on her own and raising Smitlee. After graduating from high school a year early with honors, she is in college full time, majoring in criminal justice and forensic science. She also works part-time at her grandfather’s company. Her boyfriend of two years is a corrections officer. Kali hopes that everyone who criticized and bullied her recognizes that abortion is never the answer, even for a pregnancy following a rape. She said, “There is no better gift in the entire world, no matter what anyone else tells you. There is no better gift than that baby.” Well said, Mom.

God bless you!

Father Eric
